GERMANY, 1946 | A displaced girl wrapped in blankets, sits atop her belongings, waiting to continue her journey home. UNICEF was created in December 1946 to provide food, clothing and health care to children impacted by WWII.

A crisis for children.

At times, a single photograph has the power to change hearts.

In September 2015, that image was of a little Syrian boy who washed up on a Turkish beach. He had fled a brutal war only to drown at sea en route to a new life. He was not alone. Between the time baby Aylan died and March of this year, on average, two children drowned every day in the treacherous Aegean.

Whatever the cause, whatever the country, today there are more human beings on the run than at any time since World War II. And by the end of this year, children will account for 40 percent of refugees and migrants.

UNICEF was born out of a refugee crisis following WWII. And 70 years later, UNICEF has again stepped up to support the children caught up in the world's urgent conflicts and emergencies. In 1946 and in 2016, our message has been the same: that first and foremost, children are children. They may also be refugees, migrants, stateless and displaced persons, but at the heart of it they are simply children.

Your purchase makes a difference.

From the island of Lesbos to the high streets of Berlin, legions of volunteers and NGOs are helping refugees and migrants in need. Their examples are inspiring. But UNICEF needs more people to show their commitment to protecting these vulnerable children.

When you purchase UNICEF cards and gifts for friends and family, you show that you are part of a global family, in a movement to lift our children out of the trappings of poverty, violence, and inequity. From the U.S. Fund for UNICEF, and from the world's children, for whom your support provides hope for a better future, thank you.

“Ten days after the birth of my son I lost my husband to a long illness..”

To provide for her children Eka took over her husband's small carving business. Although she worked hard, it wasn't enough. To survive, Eka needed to create new products. Today her hand carved hearts are highly sought after. She now employs other wood carvers in her village and is sending her children to school. Eka's indomitable loving spirit remains intact. When asked about her life today, Eka simply says: "I keep my spirit up and go on strong for my children."

“I am living my passion. My lifelong love of beads now helps support my family...”

Today beads are Cynthia's business. Inspired by the natural beauty of Ghana and her Akuapim traditions, she creates vibrant bead jewelry like the bracelets shown below whose beads are formed from recycled glass and plastic. Other of her eco-friendly pieces incorporate sustainable wood and natural gemstones.

“I work full time at my business and I help to support my family of five. My husband and children keep me going. I am proud of helping to support them and I want other women to be able to do the same. I hope soon to take on apprentices, to pass on what I have learned to them. My dreams for the future include college for my children and setting up my own workshop.”

“I love to string beads - Every bead lets me count myself one step closer to my dream.”

Other work by Maya Traditions is available online at unicefmarket.org/catalog

Maya Traditions Foundation has grown from 65 women to over 100 today. The women live mostly in small remote villages and are often the sole support of their families.

With limited access to markets, they have come together to share their indigenous weaving techniques with each other. Through the foundation's unique scholarship program the women are now able to help send their children to school from kindergarten to college. This and other community programs now impact over 500 people.

"We've realized that every person in the world has the same rights, and that we are capable of offering a better life to our children."

Help UNICEF put children first.

UNICEF works to save and protect the world's most vulnerable children. Every day, UNICEF provides water, nutrition, health care and education to children living in poverty or caught up in conflict or disaster. We help immunize nearly 40 percent of the world's children and use proven, low-cost interventions to save children's lives. 90% of every dollar spent goes directly to help children.
